

FOZA Volunteer – Emilia Gamundi
Online Communication Amplifier

Quote: "Every step forward, no matter how small, is a step worth taking. This is for the mothers and children of today and the future."

-Emilia Gamundi

Emilia Gamundi is a recent graduate from Georgetown University's McDonough School of Business, where she earned her Master's in Management and Systems with a focus on consumer analytics. With several years of experience in marketing and operations, Emilia has worked extensively across digital platforms, consumer packaged goods, social media, and sustainability initiatives.

Originally from the Dominican Republic, Emilia has been passionate about community service from a young age. She has dedicated her time to volunteering with various nonprofits, particularly those focused on supporting children in underprivileged communities with limited resources and educational opportunities.

Now, Emilia channels this dedication into her work helping mothers and children access vital resources for postpartum depression support, continuing her mission to create meaningful change for future generations.
